The materials used, along with its extremely simple design allowed the gun to be made and marketed inexpensively. The TEC-22's internal parts. The single-piece frame/receiver is molded from ABS plastic and largely unmachined with the exception of the bolt guides which the bottom of the bolt rides on. A stamped steel receiver cover hinges at the front of the frame and latches onto the rear of the bolt assembly. The bolt assembly consists of a cast steel bolt that rides on a spring and follower; a thin firing pin channel runs down the center of the bolt, allowing the stamped firing pin to be struck by the hammer and impact the cartridge at the front of the bolt.[8] Although the Tec-22 is compatible with 10/22 magazines, Intratec manufactured and sold their own brand of 15- and 30-round double stack magazines for the pistol.[citation needed] A small, ambidextrous[6] switch on the frame actuates a trigger block safety.[5] A hinged door at the bottom of the grip provides a small storage compartment. Over its production run, the TEC-22 suffered from various guality control issues. For example, some were recalled because they were firing automatic bursts.[9] Variants Original The original TEC-22 variant featured a threaded barrel[5][10] and a 30-round magazine. The barrel threading is 1/2-20 and allows a barrel extension or suppressor[10] to be attached. A small, knurled nut threads onto the barrel to protect the threading.[citation needed] TEC-22TK A small number of pistols were made with the Tec-Kote rust-resistant finish in 1988. Other than the finish, there is no difference between models.[2] TEC-25 In 1986 a small number of the TEC-25 is completely unrelated to the Intratec Protec-25 pistol. Sport-22 The Sport-22 featured a non-threaded barrel and a 10-round rotary magazine[2] to comply with the now expired 1994 U.S. firearms legislation which forbade the sale of the original TEC-22 model.[11] See also Škorpion vz. 61 TEC-9 References ^ a b c d Phillip Peterson (2008). This part could be charged as conspiracy to violate the 68 GCA.... The guy who makes these videos is an SOT02 and an FFL07 so he can legally build this stuff.... and its arguable that the videos are being made for other sot02's to follow... but actually selling the glock happy switch assembly is a no no, and telling people where to buy could be conspiracy. joepamjohn05-31-2009, 1:02 PM:43:Why don't one of you guys buy it and lend it to me? darkest200005-31-2009, 1:34 PMfreedom of the press, my friend. audihenry05-31-2009, 1:57 PMThis doesn't sound right on any level. That's like saying because I have a gun, a bag, and a ski mask that I'm planning on robbing a bank. The information is out there for people to do all kinds of illegal things - make drugs, bombs disrupt the power grid, hack computers, find kiddie porn, you name it. It's up to YOU what you do with that information. This is why our youth need to learn good judgment, which will ultimately be the only way crimes are prevented. But if some day SHTF, you may find the information useful. Personally, I like knowing stuff. Are we so socially advanced, that we are beyond civil war? Having ANY parts for a FA conversion is a very very bad idea if not illegal altogether. YES. Many fail to realize that CA state law prohibits any FA FCG part. Any AR Hammer, sear, disconnector, selector, trigger... Even notched rails not welded to an AK receiver! I see this all the time, and I'm amazed that some of you guys still don't get it. I'm sorry, not trying to be an a55. 1. Any conversion part is a NFA item, federal law. (A gun part designed, or made for converting, is considered an MG.) (Smiting tools do not apply.) 2. Any FA part in a free state is fine, by its self...However FA parts with matching model receivers = constructive possession, federal law. 3. Any FCG FA part in the state of CA is a state felony. CA does not have a constructive possession law, you can have SB uppers, but any FA FCG part alone is a state felony. BCG is not considered a FA FCG part as it has been classified part of the upper. When I got my AK kit. It had the FA FCG included. :43: Not illegal unless you have a rifle they can be installed in. And a parts kit is not a rifle until it is assembled. As for State law, a single FA FCG part is a Felony. But you didn't say you built your rifle in CA :-) PersistencePrevails09-01-2010, 10:02 PMI am interested to hear the outcome of the sellers reputation. Getting the forms filled, and paying the tax stamps does not seem to be the problem, but doing the work just for a s slamfire is not worth the effort. I am expecting the thing to be dam* well close to the norrel trigger pack that goes for 9k itself. So can anyone verify the authenticity? Verify the authenticity of a product that everyone here knows is illegal? Way to troll. BTW, did anyone else notice how much of the serial number was visible in the video?
